Julie said she decided to continue her busy schedule despite Watergate because she wants to be part of her father's administration and talk about his programs.

She said she wants to make a contribution "to the

When my dad left Washington in 1960-61, he left with about the same thing he came in with. He didn't make a lot of money in government."

Julie said she thinks the press and the American people "should be disturbed at the whole idea of burglary and coverup."

"What disturbs me greatly," said the President's daughter, is that "the press made a hero of Daniel Ellsberg. He stole documents. It was a question of national security and that could have much greater consequences than bugging the Democratic National headquarters . . .

"What's really sad is that Watergate in a way is the result of government being so big, so much power in the presidency. . . . Government gets bigger and bigger. But this administration did try to really make a start. This administration ... really sincerely tried to make government less ... more lived, less powerful."
